THE STEM CELL WARS

When a Nobel prize is up for grabs, do scientists across the globe compete on a level playing field? Peter Aldhous investigates

The most influential players in cellular reprogramming are revealed by recording how many times the scientists have referred to each other's work. Each link shows where one researcher cited another four or more times in papers in leading journals (for analysis, see "The strongest link", below right)

The Opportunity Gap

Is Your State Providing Equal Access to Education?

Tweet 108

ProPublica analyzed federal education data from the 2009-2010 school year to examine whether states provide high-poverty schools equal access to advanced courses and special programs that researchers say will help them later in life. This is the first nationwide picture of exactly which courses are being taken at which schools and districts across the country. More than three-quarters of all public school children are represented. Read our story and our methodology.

The Rainmakers: California's top political donors, 2001-2011

Lavishing their largesse on legislators and political committees alike, the largest donors to California politics spent \$1.25 billion from 2001 through 2011. The group — 50 special interests and 50 wealthy individuals — spans the Golden State's social order. They are corporate leaders and venture capitalists, real estate developers and Hollywood scions. They are energy and tobacco companies, labor unions and tribal governments. Collectively, they shelled out a third of all the money given to campaigns in the state during the 11-year period. This data includes only contributions to candidates and ballot measure committees, not independent expenditure groups.

Report Your Accident and Help Us Improve Our Bike App

Were you in an accident involving a bike, but never officially reported it to the police? Many bike accidents go unreported, which makes tracking statistics more difficult.

Help make this tool, and our analysis, more accurate. Share details of your previously unreported crash here. Questions? Drop a line! newsapps@baycitizen.org.
